

Monthly review

During the month, Central Banks adopted a more restrictive stance on inflation, while negotiations between the United States and Iran continued with a positive outcome, successfully culminating mid-month in a preliminary agreement on the management of the Strait of Hormuz. The two dynamics point in opposite directions: the former restrictive through rates and liquidity, the latter supportive through lower oil prices and the normalisation of value chains. The macro backdrop remains solid, as confirmed by early-June US non-farm payroll data and corporate fundamentals, but the very elevated levels of optimism and positioning in certain sectors and stocks, which almost exclusively drove equity market performance in the first half of 2026, call for greater caution. Consistently with this assessment, the overall risk profile was marginally reduced. The equity allocation was trimmed by taking profits on technology stocks near market highs, alongside the construction of optional hedges on US equities, which were subsequently increased progressively. In light of the reduction in risk, leverage was reduced by closing the exposure to two active global macro managers focused on emerging-market currencies. For the same reasons, profits were also taken in full on the position linked to US interest-rate volatility. On the fixed-income side, duration was increased at the beginning of the month through call options on German government bonds, based on the view that an imminent agreement between the US and Iran to reopen the Strait of Hormuz would lead to a decline in rates; following the announcement of the preliminary agreement in mid-June and the resulting fall in rates, half of the position was liquidated upon reaching the target in order to lock in gains. Positioning at month-end reflects an approach that remains moderately pro-risk, but more cautious. Within equities, the prevailing exposure is to Europe with a domestic focus, alongside a selective preference for US technology supported by hedges; the allocation to emerging markets was unchanged, with a preference for Asia and Chinese technology. In fixed income, duration increased through bullish exposure via call options on German government bonds, while credit remains concentrated in high-quality issuers. Two modest positions in the dollar and gold are maintained; within alternative strategies, the preference for event driven remains central.
