

Monthly review

July delivered a positive performance for the strategy. After a volatile start to the month, profit-taking in technology stocks led to greater market dispersion, but had only a limited impact on both the portfolio and its benchmark, given their structurally lower exposure to the sector. Performance was supported primarily by energy holdings, benefiting from higher oil prices and solid quarterly results, as well as by the financial sector. Conversely, a few healthcare positions experienced moderate weakness and slightly weighed on returns. During the month, the position in Zurich Insurance was exited after reaching its target price, while holdings in Visa and Edenred were partially reduced to lock in gains. Two new positions were added: BlackRock and Munich Re. The portfolio continues to exhibit attractive characteristics, combining a balanced sector allocation with an estimated dividend yield of approximately 3.7% over the next twelve months. It remains focused on companies with strong cash generation, resilient balance sheets, attractive valuations and sustainable dividend policies. In an equity market environment characterised by elevated valuations and increasing concentration, this positioning represents an important source of diversification. The outlook for interest rates, particularly in the United States, as well as movements in the euro-dollar exchange rate, remain key factors to monitor. At the same time, geopolitical developments surrounding US-Iran relations continue to represent the most relevant external risk for financial markets. Looking ahead, the overall environment remains moderately constructive, supported by resilient global growth, although market leadership is becoming increasingly selective. The portfolio remains positioned in sector-leading companies that combine sustainable dividend growth, strong cash-flow generation and financial strength. The investment approach will continue to emphasise quality and valuation discipline, avoiding potential yield traps and businesses whose valuations appear disconnected from underlying fundamentals. The cash allocation, currently above 4%, provides valuable flexibility. In an environment of elevated volatility and higher interest rates, it offers the ability to act quickly should attractive opportunities emerge. Conversely, if disinflation continues, currency markets remain stable and earnings growth broadens beyond the largest technology companies, this liquidity can be deployed gradually into the most compelling investment opportunities.
