

Monthly review

During August, the Italian equity market continued to trade within a broadly range-bound pattern, influenced not only by developments in the conflict between Iran and the United States, but also by inflation data, which will be pivotal in shaping central banks' forthcoming policy decisions. The reporting season also drew to a close, delivering overall encouraging results, particularly within the banking and insurance sectors. The weakest area remained the automotive industry, where Stellantis continues to face pressure from the growing competitiveness of Chinese manufacturers. AI-related stocks experienced a marked increase in volatility, reflecting fluctuations across the broader technology sector. Against this backdrop, utilities corrected, weighed down by higher interest rates, while oil stocks also underperformed. By contrast, financials and banks outperformed, with the ongoing consolidation process continuing to dominate the sector narrative. Across the mid- and small-cap universe, corporate results were generally positive as well. From a sector allocation perspective, we maintained our underweight positions in utilities and oil-related stocks, while continuing to favour financials. Among our preferred holdings are Montepaschi and Unipol. During the month, we added to Sol and Fiera Milano, while exiting our positions in Iren, Acea and Ariston. Our most significant holdings within the small-cap segment remain Sol, Danieli risp, Mondadori and Philogen.
